

A tidy distinction between private economic goals and public social goals influence on business ethics.

Businesses social responsibility is not a solution to society's ills.

«What are guidelines that help managers make daily decisions and create environments that are productive and understandable to employees and society?» and other questions stand before managers.

Business ethics is a part of country's social environment. Each company picks its own means of dealing with ethics. International business ethics are impossible to define.

THE CORREATION OF SOCIAL ASPECT, ECONOMY AND ORGANIZATIONS IN FORMATION OF A REAL SUSTAINABLE CIVIL SOCIETY

I. A civil society plays a very important role in creation of sustainable democracy and stable economic system.

II. A civil society is defined by modern publications as a voluntarily formed community of people, the whole complex of social relations, an association of citizens united by different indications that helps in realizing potential abilities of everyone for the good of all. It's a self-regulated system of non-government relations, setting up as a result of interplay between free, equal and independent from each other and from the state citizens and their incorporations.

III. There are three main fundamental structural elements of a civil society. They are:

- SOCIAL ASPECT
- ECONOMY
- ORGANIZATIONS (including political ones)

An important component of the social foothold is transition to absolutely new principles of interaction between the nature, the society and the human being. This means that the ultimate objective of the scientific-technical progress and the scientific-economic progress should be the human being, its spiritual and physiological health in a sound and favourable environment.

The economic foothold must include plurality of forms of property, the market and contact. The presence of plurality of forms of property and functioning of market relations establish the law in its classical meaning. They already fixed in the social consciousness principle of inviolability and sanctity of private property serves as the foundation for establishing the market and civilized commodity-money relations. As the market economy represents a foundation of the society and all social relations evolve out of and fully depend on market relations, legal principles gradually penetrate all spheres and forms of human existence.

The third foothold is organizations. Different public organizations established by people and intended to satisfy their interests in their functioning have to observe legal principles. International experience proves the point that socio-economic measures could be productive only in the organic connection with political measures. In reality it means democratization of political and social life, strengthening of the role of such civil society institutions as non-government organizations, bodies of local self- government, the church, the mass media, trade unions, social groups and individuals.

*Destruction of social moral, law, national values, civil institutions are real problems that just have to be solved the nearest time. The passive activity of citizens who do not have the experience of self-sufficient political paternship exacerbates these problems. Where is the way out?

Problems and issues that can be discussed during the speech:

- What about a civil society in our republic?
- What part does a civil society take in our minds?
- What about a role of economic system in Belarus? Is it connected with the whole system of a CIVIL SOCIETY?
- Are we just notionalists or praticians?
